Hornung, with Joseph Schwartz, of Guttenburg, a lad of the same age, went picking huckleberries at Granton, and afterward went swimming in Belliman's Creek. In order to get home quickly they decided to steal a ride on a passing train. Hornung jumped on the engine, but on looking back saw that Schwartz had falled to get on one of the cars. Although the train was then going pretty lively he jumped off and was drawn under the train. His neck was broken and the head almost severed from the body, one arm cut off and he was otherwise terriby mutilated. Death was instantaneous. After Coroner Curry had viewed the bad's home.
